Joint Staff Enlisted Council plans dining out

By Senior Master Sgt. Matt Wolfe, USAF

Joint Staff Public Affairs

The Joint Staff Enlisted Council Dining-out planning committee met Monday to discuss details of the upcoming enlisted dining-out.

Navy Petty Officer 1st Class Jeffrey S. Conrad chaired the meeting that began planning activities for another successful dining out.

The committee decided that this year's dining out will be Oct. 3 at the Andrews Air Force Base Noncommissioned Officers Club.

planning is required for a smooth and enjoyable evening, Conrad said.

He said the Joint Staff Enlisted Council needs volunteers to work on the various committees to include protocol, entertainment, decorations, and fundraising.

The planning committee also hopes to select a theme for this year's event sometime in the near future. Suggested themes can be sent by E-mail to Conrad by April 4.

As the event draws closer, ticket information and unit representatives will be released.

Every JSEC member is encouraged to show support by donating time to make this year's dining out the best ever! The next meeting is 1 p.m. April 9 in Room 2E1010.

The future of warfare

Army officer predicts fewer 'classic wars'

By Maj. Dave Thurston, USAF

J-Scope Managing Editor

"The next century will be a mess." With that thought-provoking statement, Army Maj. Ralph Peters began a fascinating two-hour presentation in the National Military Command Center's Emergency Conference Room March 21. Peters is a future warfare officer on the Army Staff in the Pentagon.

His lecture was the third in a series of professional development presentations sponsored by the J-5 Strategy Plans and Policy directorate's senior Army officer, Brig Gen. David S. Weisman. Earlier presentations concerned the Army's revised professional management program and a Training and Doctrine Command briefing titled "The Army After Next."

Peters began with a comparison of "synthetic" and "certainty-based" cultures and the inevitable conflict arising between the two. According to Peters, the United States and other western nations are synthetic cultures because there are "multiple paths to the truth" and the freedom to pursue them. He contrasts that with the cultures of many emerging and third world countries in which the state imposes a rigid doctrine or religion prescribing only one "truth" and little or no freedom of choice.

Army Maj. Ralph Peters makes a point during his presentation on the future of warfare March 21 in the NMCC.

The wide-ranging lecture discussed the impact of technology on various cultures around the world. Calling information "the most destabilizing factor in the world today," Peters described how communications media like television and the Internet affect everything from the role of women in society to the basic function of governments.

Much of the first hour focused on sociological factors while the second half discussed the implications for the military. Peters projects fewer "classic" wars but increasing levels of violence. He sees a decrease in the power of the nation state other than simple organic growth, and the rising importance of "city-states" and other hybrid forms of social control, and believes the increasing gulf between the "haves" and the "have nots" will lead to more civil wars and "criminal insurgencies."

Despite tremendous changes, Peters believes people will always be the key to maintaining effective military forces. With a growing struggle for decreasing resources and what he calls "new and ugly truths about mankind," Peters concludes that the primary mission of the military in the next century will be the preservation of our quality of life.

Peters is the author of six books including "The War in 2020" on future warfare, and "Twilight of Heroes," a novel about counter-drug operations. They are available through the Pentagon book store.

Pentagon hosts Russian minister

By Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — After 50 years of Cold War, America's former foe recently entered the Pentagon's inner sanctum.

Russian Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov spent two hours on a Sunday morning inside the secure Joint Chiefs of Staff conference room known as "the tank."

Primakov's visit March 16 symbolized how far U.S.-Russian relations have progressed since the end of the Cold War, said Defense Secretary William Cohen.

conference room.

The tank earned its nickname in 1942 when the chiefs held their first formal meeting in a room in downtown Washington reached by descending a stairway and going through an archway, giving the impression of entering a tank. Even after the chiefs moved to the Pentagon, the nickname survived.

Inside today's tank, DoD officials briefed the Russian minister on U.S. force reductions in Europe and on the new NATO. They covered how NATO has been reconfigured, its new command structure and how U.S. officials fore-

Russian leaders say they fear NATO will deploy nuclear weapons closer to its borders if new members are admitted to the security alliance. Cohen said he assured Primakov there is no reason to do so.

"We have taken great pains to show how an enlargement of NATO will not be structured in a way that will pose an offensive threat to Russia," Cohen said. "We are proposing measures that will deal with their legitimate security questions as opposed to unreasonable fears or exaggerations that might be generated by those opposed to any concept of NATO enlargement."

The briefing was a "give and take" opportunity for the Russian delegation, Cohen said. "Ordinarily, you could have run through the presentation in about a half hour, but we took the time to answer questions that he and his associates posed."

Cohen said Primakov said he was impressed by the frank exchange. "It was the first time he had the opportunity to meet with our military leaders and pose questions to them. I think he will go back to President [Boris] Yeltsin with a report that is quite positive."

Senior Master Sgt. Lola Taylor, President of the Air Force Enlisted Council, presented a voucher Tuesday for a vacation as part of a fund raising event.

Sean Moffitt, a Joint Staff furniture sales & installation contractor, accepted the cash voucher to Caesar's Pocono Resorts in Pennsylvania.

The trip will be some what of a homecoming for Sean who grew up within one hour of the resort. Sean and his wife, Jennifer, who were married last summer, are looking forward to this romantic getaway.

Air Force Tech. Sgt. Lawrence Canady facilitated the fund raising activities and helped the Air Force Enlisted Council raise money needed to support programs benefiting the enlisted and civilian community.

The council is involved in many events each year to raise money to support many worthwhile programs such as the enlisted recognition programs, Thanksgiving baskets, brown bag lunches during the holidays, a warm coat program, and the enlisted dining out. The council encourages others to participate and to take an active role in identifying the important issues affecting enlisted members on the Joint Staff.

Cutting edge

Behind the scenes the J-Scope editor gives newspaper an electronic twist

By Maj. Dave Thurston, USAF
Managing Editor

The J-Scope mailbox is overflowing with a steady stream of comments from our readers and ads for everything from houses to Malt-O-Meal. The level of traffic indicates reader interest which means the editor (not me - the working editor) is doing something right.

This week's mail includes a suggestion that we explain the J-Scope process. The reader said: "...I have to hand it to you guys, you certainly have your hands full... maybe you should do an article on how the J-Scope is put together from start to finish." Sounds like a good idea.

First and most important, it's not "you guys." The J-Scope from start to finish is the product of one very talented Air Force journalist. Staff Sgt. Lee Roberts is the J-Scope's reporter, proofreader, editor, photographer, lab technician, layout and design expert, graphic artist, advertising executive, circulation manager, and delivery boy all rolled into one very busy NCO! At a typical base newspaper, those tasks are accomplished by as many as four people. Needless to say, Roberts puts in far more than his share of 12-hour days.

For our technically-minded readers, the tools used to assemble the J-Scope include a Pentium 133 computer with 32mb of RAM (which is not enough), both traditional and digital cameras, and negative and print photo scanners. Our software includes Adobe PageMaker for desktop publishing, Adobe PhotoShop for photo manipulation, CorelDraw for graphics, and Microsoft Word. E-Mail provides valuable direct contact with our readers while the Internet has proven to be an invaluable research tool.

A typical edition of the J-Scope begins taking shape days or even weeks before the Friday it's published. Roberts keeps a running list of upcoming events and stories in development. Some are from outside sources like American Forces Information Service and the Service news organizations. Occasionally we get articles written by other members of the Joint Staff including our Unit Public Affairs Representatives or UPARs. But most of the J-Scope content is the result of Roberts' personal reporting and writing.

At this point, I have to credit the only other person who regularly contributes to the J-Scope. Air Force Master Sgt. Mamie M. Burke, the chairman's photographer, takes many of the photos we use in the J-Scope. Without her input, your paper would not be nearly as interesting.

When traditional film is used, we rely on the Army Graphics Center to process it and transfer the images to CD-ROM disk for input into the J-Scope computer. That process normally takes one or two days. The digital camera enables Roberts to immediately download the images directly to the computer where they are then enhanced for clarity and sized to fit the story they accompany.

After gathering the facts for a story, Roberts transcribes any tape recorded interviews and uses that information to write the stories. Then, putting on his editor's hat, he assembles the various elements of that week's edition. A lead story and front page photo must be selected and other news articles and features arranged in logical sequence in the newspaper. Once those are in place, Roberts gathers and verifies information on promotions, awards, and other ceremonies along with photos when available. He sorts through the reader feedback and ads submitted for that week and fits it all together like a jigsaw puzzle.

Once he has proofread his work and is satisfied, the managing editor or another member of the Public Affairs staff provides another set of eyes to search for the inevitable typos.

When Roberts is satisfied, he makes backup copies and places the J-Scope file in a designated location on the "G" drive. On Friday morning, he sends the now familiar e-mail announcing the availability of a new edition. The final step is to e-mail a copy to the Defense Technical Information Center where it is made available on JCSLink, the Joint Staff's home page on the Internet.

And then, he starts all over again.

Get web information about each service branch

By Doug Gillert

American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — What if a place existed on the World Wide Web where you could get information about every branch of the armed forces, including the Coast Guard?

There is, you say, and you're right. It's called Defense Link <http://www.dtic.mil/defense/defenselink/>.

But what if that site also connected to employment and education opportunities to help you plan what to do after you leave the military? What if it also provided magazines to read, like "Time" and "Sports Illustrated"? What if it gave you all this and a whole lot more?

I've stumbled onto such a site — Armed Forces.Com — and I think you'll like it. This is not a DoD site. A private firm operates and runs it.

First, the address:

<http://www.armedforces.com>.

Now, the contents:

Fifteen icons provide hypertext links to these sections and categories:

Army

Army homepage, recruiting, "Soldiers" magazine, the Army Reserve, the U.S. Military Academy, Army ROTC, retirement services, insignia and medals, and an Army sources locator with 40 more links.

Navy

Navy Online (gateway to information about the Navy), SEALs, the Naval Academy, Sea Cadets, Naval Postgraduate School, recruiting, Naval Undersea Warfare Center, Blue Angels air show information and naval warfare during World War II.

Air Force

Air Force Link (current news and information), Air Base (touring a typical Air Force installation), Air Force Personnel Center, Air Force Reserve, Air Force

Academy, ROTC scholarships, civilian news sources, links to other Air Force World Wide Web services and aviation photographs.

Marines

Marine Corps homepage, Marine officers, Marine Postgraduate School, Headquarters Marine Corps, modeling and simulation, 210 reasons to love the Corps, and Sgt. Grits' Specialties (stuff you can buy).

Military Resources

Army and Air Force Exchange Service (on-line shopping), Military City Online (a service of the Army Times Publishing Company), Defense Link, agency locator, The Wall (lists all the names on the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington), The Airborne Page (for military jump school grads), Air National Guard and Parcels (information about closing and realigning military bases for people interested in buying, leasing or developing property).

Home Base

A-Z listing of military installations worldwide. Access installations alphabetically (click on "P" for Peterson Air Force Base, for example) or location (Colorado). Sites typically contain information about the installation, the surrounding community, education, employment, health care, housing, child care, relocation services and some nifty "survival tips" for first-time movers.

Military News

This isn't what you're probably thinking, so don't look for news about your service branch or unit. Instead, the site provides links to news services the webmaster thinks you might be interested in. Examples: CNN World News, "Sports Illustrated," "Time," "Los Angeles Times" and "Money." Intellicast posts global weather reports, including worldwide skiing conditions. And, Legal Chat connects with law firms offering advice and assistance on personal legal matters.

My favorite spot on this web site. Here, you'll find language lessons for travelers, Conde Nast travel reports, TravelWeb (on-line registration for hotels just about anywhere), Las Vegas, cruise connections, Amtrak routes and vacation packages, "Earth-friendly" vacation packages, foreign exchange rates, interactive maps and — my favorite of favorites — beaches. This one includes "live" camera shots at some locations — Venice Beach, Calif., for example — with new images every 10 minutes. Surf's up, dude!

Weapons

High-energy weapons archive, unofficial mine warfare home page, "China Lake Weapons Digest" (naval weapons development),

Health and Fitness

Body mechanics, alcoholism and drug addiction, recipes (including a site for vegetarians), pregnancy services, facts on sexually transmitted diseases and safer sex, planned parenthood, date rape and smoking from the point of view of smokers and nonsmokers.

Sports & Rec

ESPNET, National Basketball Association, Sports Network, college sports, women's sports, Resort Sports Network, CNN Sports, soccer, track and field (world records), endurance training, weightlifting and recreational sports such as golf, fishing and water skiing. You can view Armed Forces.Com with or without graphics, but if your computer has the capability and capacity, I recommend going graphical. Otherwise you'll miss out on all the great photographs of airplanes, ships, guns and yes, people.

One more recommendation, then I'm outthere: Access this web site soon, bookmark it and visit often.

J-Scope feedback

The following comments have recently been E-mailed to the J-Scope by our readers.

“I read with interest the J-Scope Feedback comment (March 21 issue) regarding the use of the Red Cross in the Clara Barton article. It seems the author is not aware of Batron’s membership in the Red Cross. In fact, Clara Barton was the first president of the Red Cross, which she founded almost single-handedly (with the financial support of John D. Rockefeller). This institution has provided comfort in times of crisis since 1882. As the Detroit Free Press wrote of Barton shortly after her death in 1912, “She was perhaps the most perfect incarnation of mercy the modern world has ever known.”

Barton was also a friend of the military, supporting Civil War troops with supplies, food and medicines. Keep up your great work with the J-Scope.

Your magazine is fine. Please don’t bore me with a story on Liddy Dole. If you really want to revamp an article on the Red Cross, do it on the people who are the backbone of the Red Cross, the “Little People.”

I’ve read just about every J-Scope since its inception. And each time I find something that tweaks my interest. Based on the amount of information contained in the J-Scope, I have to hand it to you guys - you certainly have your hands full. Unless I missed it, maybe you should do an article on how the J-Scope is put together from start to finish. Maybe this will give folks a better understanding of all the hard work that is involved. I find it extremely nerve-wracking when I read the many comments submitted by various individuals "complaining" about the length, etc. Having been in the Joint Staff for almost 20 years, it does my heart good to see how far the Joint Staff has progressed with today's technology. It just amazes me to no end how we work in a command with so many intelligent people, but never seem able to please them all. Maybe one day, but probably not in my lifetime.

Managing editor's note: See page 8 for commentary on the J-Scope "process."

Great story on what we're doing in Haiti! I'd like to see more real news like that and less "official" stuff.

Is something wrong with your computer? The illustrations in this week's J-Scope were out of focus.

Good Friday religious services planned today

The Annual Pentagon Good Friday Services are being conducted today in the Pentagon Auditorium, Room 5A1070. Protestant services are at 11:30 a.m.; Catholic services are at 12:15 p.m.

Have a safe Easter weekend!

Remember to BUCKLE UP!

Printing reminder

Joint Staff printing in Room 2C966 supports all black and white printing requirements in large volume. Local black and white printers are provided throughout the Joint Staff to assist with on-demand reproduction.

Also, color printing is a self-help service in the hallway outside of JCS Printing.

The color copiers are available for infished projects, now for production of draft copies. No organization may contract commercial printing work unless coordinated first through JCS Printing.

Pick-up service

Joint Staff supply will come and pick up excess furniture cluttering up offices. All customers need to do is submit a JS Form 34.

In addition, old copiers and printers can be turned into Joint Staff Supply (no JS Form 34 needed). They will attempt to credit accounts. Also, turn ins of any expendable items are usually accepted and refunds granted.

Contact Air Force Master Sgt. Roger Benitz in Room 1D844 or call him at 697-2249 for more information.

The Joint Staff "Speed Boys" captured the Pentagon Athletic Club's 3-on-3 Basketball Championship Thursday by defeating the "POAC Lunch Timers" 15-7 in the tournament finale.

The "Speed Boys" fell behind early in the game, but they stormed back with a strong rebounding effort and a shooting touch that earlier in the tournament helped them defeat OSX 15-7 and AFIP 15-14.

Irma T. Raud Washburn, POAC general manager, said 11 teams played in the single-elimination tournament they sponsored in celebration of POAC's 50th Anniversary Celebration.

News Network

Each directorate of the Joint Staff has one or more individuals assigned the additional duty of Unit Public Affairs Representative or UPAR. The UPAR's job is to help tell the story for that organization by reporting news about unit and individual activities and achievements to the J-Scope. UPARs also process Hometown News Release forms, assist with publicity for special events, and identify story ideas for future publication. Contact your assigned UPAR if you have a story to tell, have won an award, been promoted, or need to publicize a special event.
